Leaders in reef fight

THREE of Australia's top business leaders have joined the fight to save Queensland's Great Barrier Reef.

Suncorp chief executive John Mulcahy, Goldman Sachs managing director Keith Tuffley and the Myer Foundation's Kerry Gardner are the most recent recruits to the board of the Great Barrier Reef Foundation.

The foundation is an independent body that raises funds to support research and education to preserve and protect the Great Barrier Reef.

Foundation managing director Judy Stewart yesterday welcomed the new members.

They join chairman Dr John Schubert and executives from an array of Australian companies in raising funds to support research to counter the big five threats to the reef.

These are climate change, dropping water quality, over-fishing, shipping and development.
